

Registration Opens for DevNexus 2010, the professional developer conference.

Atlanta, January 12, 2010 – The DevNexus conference will be held in Atlanta from March 8–9 and registration is now open. DevNexus covers a wide range of the most exciting topics related to the Java™ platform.

This year, our sophisticated line-up of speakers covers dynamic programming languages such as Scala and Groovy as well as Rich Internet Applications (RIA) such as Adobe Flex. Furthermore, we have a dedicated track on Google technologies, which not only covers Google Web Toolkit (GWT) but also App Engine and Google Wave. Additionally, DevNexus has sessions not only covering popular open source projects such as Spring, Maven and HtmlUnit but we also have presentations on software architecture, agile software development methodologies and much more! Please join us for this exceptional event.

The organizers of DevNexus are focused on making sure the conference offers the best possible educational value by offering attendees a special early bird rate of $150 if they register between now and February 16. A group discount is also available and regular admission for the two-day conference is $185. The ticket price includes the two-day conference pass as well as meals.

This is the second DevNexus event, which is the continuation of the annual AJUG developer conferences that started in 2004.

For further information: <http://www.devnexus.com/>

Media contact:

Gunnar Hillert

Phone: 678-908-9067

E-mail: info@ajug.org

Web: <http://www.ajug.org/>

About AJUG

The Atlanta Java Users Group (AJUG) is a non–profit special interest group for the professional software development community in the Atlanta metropolitan area. With over 1400 members, the group is entirely funded by its sponsors. AJUG has monthly meetings covering topics around the Java™ platform and general Internet technologies.